

Formally Arraigned.

The Alleged Cronin Murderers
Again in Court.

THEY ALL PLEAD NOT GUILTY.

And are hurriedly Taken Back to Jail.
No Startling Discoveries Made Known.
The Grand Jury Rest in the Case.
Other Affairs Connected With the Mystery.

CHICAGO, June 1.—Contrary to the general expectation the grand jury occupied itself yesterday with routine business instead of taking up another branch of the Cronin case. This was due to the fact that States Attorney Longenecker has not made up his mind whether or not it is desirable to complicate the investigation by going into the alleged perversion of the physical force fund.

Formally Arraigned.

Ex-Detective Coughlin, P. O. Sullivan, the ice man and Frank Woodruff were formally arraigned in Judge Williams' court yesterday afternoon on the charge of murdering Dr. Cronin. They were hurriedly brought into the court through the passageway leading from the jail at a time when very few spectators were present. Counsel for the prisoners had not been notified of the intended action, but lawyer David, who represents Sullivan, happened to be in court at the time. All three pleaded "not guilty," and David made the stereotyped motion to quash the indictments, but no date was set for argument. After each of the three prisoners had been furnished with a copy of the indictment against him, they were taken back to jail. All three looked anxious and careworn, although it was apparent that they were trying to preserve a cool exterior.

Sensational Story Denied.

An effort was made yesterday to manufacture a sensation out of the arrest of a man variously known as "Williams" and "Mack," and who was taken by the police from a West Side lodging house. It was gravely stated that he knew all about the crime, and that it would probably be developed that he was the man that nailed down the carpet in the Curson cottage. Chief Hubbard knocked the story in the head last night. Williams, he said, had not the slightest connection with the mystery, and he was simply being held at the Desplaines Street station pending his return to the Bridewell from which he escaped some time ago.

Not Sufficient Evidence.

It is developed that at the conference between Hubbard and Lynes, the entire situation was gone over and that the chief expressed the emphatic opinion that there was no evidence on hand that would warrant any additional arrests, especially of Dr. Cronin's friends, have been directed.

The city detectives, however, are still following up a number of leads promising and unpromising, and some of which may result in additional arrests at any time.

Clan-na-Gael Convention.

Local members of the Irish land league express considerable satisfaction with the action of the Philadelphia committee in refusing to postpone the July convention as suggested by President Fitzgerald. They say that the order is not identified in any way with the recent tragedy, except that its members abhor the crime and deplore the untimely end of the victim, and that the postponement of the convention by conveying a different impression might have worked great harm to the cause of Ireland.

Important Witness in Omaha.

OMAHA, Neb., June 1.—George Soule, a hostler, now in the employ of Charles Mentor on Davenport street, talked of the Cronin murder to a reporter yesterday afternoon. He was employed in Jim Cumming's barn, at 142 Madison street, Chicago, prior to his coming to Omaha. He was working there on the night that Cronin was murdered, and states about 2 o'clock in the morning, or some time after midnight, Woodruff drove up to the barn with the famous white horse that has been written so much about, and is supposed to have drawn the rig which carried Cronin to his death. Woodruff said he wanted to leave the horse there over night and would call for it in the morning. Soule did not get up at the time, but the next morning found the white horse in his section. He cleaned him off, fed and watered him and Woodruff called about noon.

"Is that horse all right?" asked Woodruff, as he approached Soule.

"I don't see anything wrong with him," replied Soule.

"Well, if any one had offered me $10 for the entire outfit last night he could have had it. I had a h— of a time with the beggar. In fact I believe I would sell him pretty cheap this morning."

Soule took it for granted that Woodruff wanted to sell his outfit pretty badly, but at that time, of course, did not know anything about the murder. Woodruff then drove away, and was never seen again by Soule, as the latter left for Omaha two days later.

Inquiries made show that Soule did leave Chicago at that time, and his statement is considered correct.

Narrow Escape From Drowning.

BAY CITY, Mich., June 1.—The steamer Seagull, towing two rafts was swamped by the heavy sea and sunk in Saginaw bay, off Linwood, Thursday afternoon. The crew of nine men managed to swim ashore, having a narrow escape and reached this city. The boat was built in 1878, valued at $7,000 and will be raised.

Striking for Nine Hours.

LOWELL, Mass., June 1.—The Lowell carpenters' union last evening adopted a resolution notifying the 200 signers of the agreement to strike on June 1 for nine hours and regular pay; that the obligation goes into effect at 5 p. m.
